Feelings of a Vell.w Fever mu cerers en Patient.

The New Orleans Bulletin says the following was written by a ye low fever patient on the fifth day after being taken sick. The labor of writing it caused a The Republican State Central Committee tight up the Republican mejority at 2,000 in the State.

The writer of this has had a glimpse of purgatory, and the way it came to pass was this: Tu aday morning, "Yellow Jack," so called, introduced aimseit unceremontously, and at once proceeded to break every bone in this noor subject body. He was left helpless and prastrated. Now appeared an army of little devils, who commenced prowing, prodding and digging to satisty themselves that not a bone was left unbroken. But in apite of all the devils, the skull remained unbroken. They made a detail to keep continually beating the subject on the top of the bead and downward toward the neck. Then they had a kind of creek the top of the bead and downward toward the neck. Then they had a kind of creek fare, which, at regular intervals, they poured down the spine of the subject.

Having arranged all these pretuninaries, they, of course, thought they had him dead. Now they commenced a curious gam; all wonto whith arout, then stop all of a sudden and play with some strange devices, that were not cards nor dice, yet something of the sort. The subject watched the game with intense interest, so much so that he almost forgothis broken bones and unbinged joints. Thus his mind and his spinis and the game went spinning along together in about dark, when a servant entered and asked it he su ject was sick. He rather though he was.
